

→ be ready for difficult conversations; a tendency to avoid them makes us feel uneasy, shame & guilt. We tend to make stories about other person & ourselves.

- Vulnerability is the core of shame and fear and our struggle for worthiness, but it appears that it's also the birthplace of joy, creativity, of belonging, of love.
- It is the greatest measure of courage

Not enough

The feeling of not being or doing enough, being wrong, not having the answers, being an imposter, and being found out as one

Not belonging

The feeling of not being (a loved) part of the team, letting others down, being misunderstood

Not in control

The feeling of not being able to fix, not being able to help, losing power over a situation

Not mattering

The feeling of not being focused on the right purpose, of focusing on things that don't matter, of insignificance

Let's get deeper. Think about the following:

1. Where do you come from? What impact has a figure such as a parent or a colleague had on you?
2. What are the formative experiences (from any point in your life) that shaped who you are as a person?
3. Which of your traits are often seen as strengths, but can also be weaknesses?

Address your vulnerabilities

Acknowledging the ways in which we feel vulnerable is an important first step. Sharing them is an opportunity to build a stronger relationship—and this is where the magic happens.

- Imagine the next time that vulnerability is likely to come up for you.
- Write down—yes, write it—what it might sound like if you were to share this vulnerability with others.
- Consider what the outcome might be.